After two years since its first announcement, Ryan Reynolds is officially back as Deadpool, and long with him is Hugh Jackman as the iconic Wolverine, showcasing his unhinged humor and some badass actions in the new teaser trailer for “Deadpool & Wolverine” (due out on July 26).

Even though the public only gets a teaser of what the movie is about during the Super Bowl, hype has been through the roof—the teaser breaks the record for being the most viewed trailer launched with 365 million views, dethroning “Spider-man: No Way Home”—the previous record holder.

Despite the views, the teaser itself presents many things that helps alleviate fans from the concerns they have when Deadpool is now officially under the mouse's control. The dirty humor and the gritty actions are still very much intact as Deadpool makes jabs at Disney—the umbrella that owns Marvel Studios.

Plus, the teaser ties in many things that left opened before Disney acquired of 20th Century Fox. There are speculations as to the film will connect the X-Men from the previous ownership and the Marvel Cinematic Universe (MCU). With the inclusion of the Time Variance Authority (TVA) this time, an agency that deals with temporal anomalies in other universes—first introduced in Loki, Deadpool & Wolverine will likely answer all the questions that fans are left after the X-Men franchise from Fox closed, and somehow connect directly into the MCU roster. Plus, Wade Wilson has to explain his time travel shenanigans at the end of Deadpool 2 (2018).

Speaking of things from the past, the teaser also features familiar faces from the X-Men franchise—faces like Pyro, played by Aaron Stanford, surprises fans as the character is first introduced in X-Men 2. Many speculate that there will be returns of other characters from the Fox Marvel Universe, including Storm (played by Halle Barry) and Jean Gray (played by Famke Jansson). Of course, they are just reports and rumors—nothing set in stone. Plus, there is a rumor stating that Taylor Swift will be featured in the movie as Dazzler.

Besides the speculations, there are many that already confirmed to return, including Jennifer Garner who plays Elektra back in the 2003 Daredevil. Plus, the whole original cast from the previous Deadpool is also making their way back into the film. However, there will be new faces joining the film—the teaser features the recent Emmy winner Matthew Macfadyen from Succession, playing Paradox in the film.

Overall, the teaser really gives fans what they want, and that is Deadpool, along with his crude humors and kick-ass actions.

Deadpool & Wolverine will be released in theater July 26 which will mark Deadpool's official introduction into the MCU.
